The confocal optical device as recited in the independent claim 1 is patentable with respect to the prior art, in particular, the Publication No. 2002/0097485 and the U.S. Patent Nos. 5,625,494 and 6,288,382 by the limitations related to a confocal optical device having a beamsplitter and a redirection mirror attached to the beamsplitter wherein the beamsplitter is for reflecting a second light beam and for passing a first light beam, and the redirection mirror is for reflecting the second light beam, and wherein the device is used for illuminating a plurality of points using a plurality of illuminating beams and for focusing on a plurality of microscope holes the beams to be detected coming from the plurality of illuminated points. It is noted that while the use of a single unit for supporting both a beamsplitter and a redirection mirror into a single unit is disclosed in the mentioned Publication; however, the mentioned publication does not disclose the feature that the beamsplitter is for reflecting a second light beam and for passing a first light beam, and the redirection mirror is used for reflecting the second light beam and the single unit having the beamsplitter and the redirection mirror is used for illuminating a plurality of points using a plurality of illuminating beams and for focusing on a plurality of microscope holes the beams to be detected coming from the plurality of illuminated points. The Patent No. 6,288,382 discloses a microscope system having a plurality of illuminating points and a plurality of pinholes; however, the Patent does not disclose a device having a beamsplitter and the redirection mirror attached to the beamsplitter wherein the beamsplitter is for reflecting a second light beam and for passing a first light beam, and the redirection mirror is for reflecting the second light beam. The Patent No. 5,625,494 discloses a parallel window having a beamsplitter and a redirection mirror attached thereon; however, the Patent does not disclose that the parallel window is used in a microscope with the features recited in the independent claim 1.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
